End of Week 1 Report – Sunday January 18, 2026

The Washington State Legislature convened for the 60-day regular legislative session on Monday, January 12. This is the second year of the 25-27 legislative biennium, where the legislature will pass supplemental budgets that are generally minor adjustments to the biennial budgets passed in the previous long session. The legislature will also debate various policy topics, with proposals expected on revenue, affordable housing, artificial intelligence, energy production and transmission, transportation preservation and maintenance, and many others. Also, bills that did not pass in the 2025 session will be automatically reinstated and alive again in 2026. The legislature will face similar challenges that they faced last year as the state continues to grapple with fiscal challenges, facing a projected state budget shortfall of roughly $2 billion that will need to be addressed in the supplemental budget.

The week started with opening ceremonies on Monday, as the nine legislators who won special elections last fall were sworn in, and legislators approved chamber rules. On Tuesday, Governor Ferguson gave his State of the State address, and highlighted recent challenges the state has faced, but also expressed optimism about the state's future. The Governor addressed the state's historic flooding in December, noting the hardship to thousands of Washingtonians, while thanking first responders for all their great work. The Governor also called for bold action during the 60 day session, encouraging infrastructure investment, continuing progress on affordable housing, and calling for a fairer tax code expressing his support for a "millionaires' tax", which is a tax on income of more than one million a year. The Governor spoke to external challenges facing the state but also called on legislators to work in a bi-partisan fashion noting that half of the bi-partisan proposals from last year became law. In addition to these opening ceremonies, legislators got right down to business in week one, introducing hundreds of bills, scheduling work sessions in committee, and holding public hearings on legislation. As the session progresses, there are key cutoffs that bills need to meet to remain under consideration by the legislature (special exceptions apply). The first legislative deadline is coming up quickly on February 4, when bills must pass out of their respective policy committees to remain alive. See below for important cutoff dates for the 2026 session.
